1. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: Regarding claims 2-7, the prior art fails to teach and/or fairly suggest a method of determining the velocity of detonation of a metal-clad explosive fuze wherein a pair of sensors are mounted on an apparatus and the fuze is in a groove on a device, and each sensor is moved into contact with the fuze and then moved to a sensing position that does not contact the fuze before detonation. Regarding claims 8-15, the prior art fails to teach and/or fairly suggest an apparatus and method for determining the velocity of detonation of a metal-clad explosive fuze wherein a pair of sensors are spaced from and adjacent first and second locations on the fuze and wherein registration structures are used to precisely position the sensors with respect to the first and second locations.
